Why do we celebrate birthdays? The exact origin of birthday celebrations and birthday cakes is not certain, but we now have got enough information about the approximate history of birthday celebrations. Here are some interesting points about birthdays.

The Celebrations

It seems that Ancient Romans were the first to celebrate birthdays for non-religious figures. Roman citizens held birthday parties for their friends and families and the government created public holidays in honour of their most famous citizens. However, all these celebrations were for men only; female birthdays weren't celebrated until centuries later.

year since they were born, plus an extra candle to symbolise the hope for another year of life. Blowing out the candles and making a wish was also a part of the fun.

The Birthday Cake

Kinderfeste, which originated in Germany in the 18th century, is the closest celebration to the contemporary birthday party. It was held for German children, or kinder, and involved birthday cake and candles. Kids got one candle for each

The Song

In 1893, two sisters wrote a song named Good Morning to All, to be sung by students at the beginning of the school day. The song became popular across America. In 1924, Happy Birthday to You was published in a songbook for the first time. The Happy Birthday lyrics were adapted to the Good Morning to All tune. Happy Birthday became widely popular and is still sung at birthday celebrations around the world.
