Are cheetahs endangered?

©Cameron Spencer

- (1) _____ is racing toward extinction. Today there are just 7,100 cheetahs left in the wild, according to a new study.
- (2) _____ Because of several reasons, like the establishment of animal and agriculture farms. People sometimes kill cheetahs if they see the animals as a threat to their livestock, but cheetahs rarely take domesticated animals. (3) _____ for their skin and other body parts. Also, cheetah's prey species, such as antelopes and gazelles are hunted by people in many areas, leaving them without food.
- (4) _____ high demand of cheetah cubs or babies as pets mainly in the Middle East, which results in the illegal trade of cubs from North Africa.
- (5) _____ ensuring balance in the predator-prey ratio, and protection of the ecosystems are all efforts that are needed to address these threats. Surprisingly, cheetahs do not adapt well to protected areas like national parks and wildlife reserves. Fortunately, organisations such as the Cheetah Conservation Fund (CCF), are working with farmers on the ground in some places to help ensure the cheetah's survival.
